It's an otherwise acceptable arpg platformer, but I can't recommend a game of this type without proper controller support.. Does not offer native controller support as listed!

Requires Joy2Key, 3rd party (somewhat common) software for any controller function. This is straight up Legend of Zelda II: Link's Adventure, modernized. For those of you not fortunate enough to play that NES game, this is a 2D action-RPG. You play as some guy with armor and a sword, and you fight stuff to save the world and get more swords and armor and level up, like every other game ever. But this game is just well put-together, with interesting areas and enemies. The special abilities you get inside each of the four elemental temples (yes, four elemental temples, sigh) are fun too. It's not really anything new in concept, it's just done really well!. This is a mostly fun game that is very well done. It is worth a buy if you can tolerate what to me, is a major annoyance.

The biggest problem I have with it, and the reason I probably will never finish it, is that there is no save point before bosses, and when you die to a boss you are sent back to the start of the dungeon.

To make matter worse, the save point is not even at the start of the dungeon. They are usually a few screens away outside the dungeon entrance. And to make it even worse still, it automatically uses your healing herb when you hit 0 hp. So, all of this means when you die to a boss and respawn at the start of the dungeon, you will need to (minor spoiler):

- 1) walk back through 1-3 screens with enemies to get to the save point.
- 2) Teleport back to a town and get another herb, and another heal potion if you used it.
- 3) Teleport back to the dungeon.
- 4) Walk back 1-3 screens to the entrance.
- 5) Walk back ??? screens to get to the boss. A shortcut can usually be opened so you don't have to do the whole dungeon again, but it is still not trivial.
- 6) If you are like me and it usually takes several attempts to beat bosses, die again and goto 1.

I do give the game props for letting you keep your progress when you die, but this running back and forth got too annoying for me after 4-5 attempts at the fire boss and that's where I will leave it.

Edit: I realized that if you select "quit" after you die, rather than "continue", then you re-start at the save point and still have your herb and potion. This makes the delay in getting back to try the boss again tolerable, but still more trouble than it needs to be.

I tried a couple more times and beat the fire boss. A little while after that, some extra enemies are added to the entire world and with those, along with a good number of enemies that take many hits (20+?) to kill, it just became a slog that I am not motivated enough to get through.

It's still pretty well done and fun for a while.. This goddamn game is amazing.
